What is

ComPaSS ?

Exploration area for families with children

A variety of activities is in ComPaSS. Parents are supposed to enjoy discovering with their children instead of teaching. We hope to hear children's "Hey, look!" and "Come here!" a lot in ComPaSS.

Why ComPaSS?

The name of "ComPaSS" comes from a compass, a necessity for museum researchers to explore and record destinations.

For children, communicating with parents and discovering/achieving things themselves will lead to self-esteem, which is indispensable to work on issues hard to answer when they grow up.

As a compass is necessary for investigation and exploration, we think that experiences with parents in this exhibition area would be valuable for children.

The name "ComPaSS" is a combination of "Communication," "Parents," "Society," and "Science."

Try in ComPaSS!

- look at paw pads of a lion!
- get a feeling of riding on a black rhinoceros' back!
- discover a diorama of a swimming emperor penguin!
- take photos with a Tyrannosaurus family!
- go through a tunnel under a Bactrian camel's belly!
- look up at a Western Gollira's hip!
- look at strawberries and chestnuts through a magnifying glass!
- find out a mouse in shoes!
- take photos as if you have horns on your head!
- find out a baby polar bear!

ComPaSS's Philosophy

When you go home, please look back on your experience with the 'authentic specimens' of natural history and science technology. We hope that you become familiar with museums and natural science through ComPaSS.
